THE AMERICAN PRESS ON THE GREEK MASSACRE.
(New York Herald, April 26th.)
Then the massacre was a most atrocious and bloody one, and the consideration of it will be seriously considered, probably, by the English Government, which cannot permit its subjects to be murdered by brigands or by a Government which is so powerful. We are told that the troops of the King of Greece were sent after the robbers who held the English men and women prisoners, and that, though they were ordered to operate against the cut-throat rascals, they were powerless to do anything. In fact, it appears that the Government of Greece is so weak, and the immediate cause of the massacre. The brigands defied the Greek Government in the most bloody and contemptuous manner. In such a Government it is to be recognized or excused? There are, we are aware, great political and international difficulties surrounding this little kingdom. It was created and has been sustained by the European Powers, and is a sort of balance of power or territorial equilibrium on the shore of the Mediterranean. But if it cannot prevent brigands from murdering its people, the great Powers will be constrained to force it from the map or to reorganize it. We shall soon hear, probably, of some strong language from England on this subject.
